

UNHCR POSITION ON RETURNS TO SOUTH SUDAN – UPDATE I

1. This position supersedes and replaces UNHCR's February 2014 Position on Returns to South Sudan.¹

Introduction

2. The humanitarian situation in South Sudan continues to deteriorate while the security situation remains fluid and uncertain. Civil conflict continues despite negotiations between the Government of the Republic of South Sudan (the Government) and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army (in Opposition) (SPLA-iO or the Opposition) under the auspices of a regional body, the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD). Both parties are reported to have repeatedly violated cease-fire agreements.²

Security situation

3. Fighting between Government and Opposition forces continues to be reported, especially in Upper Nile, Unity and Jonglei States.³ There are also reports of continuing intercommunal clashes amidst disputes over land and cattle which pre-date the current political crisis.⁴ More than one year into the civil conflict, over 117,000 civilians are estimated to have sought safety and remain today in Protection of Civilians (PoC) sites located on bases of the UN Mission in South Sudan.⁵ These sites have not, though, been free from violence.⁶
4. According to reports, civilians throughout the country, both inside and outside of PoC sites, have been deliberately targeted by armed elements on the basis of ethnicity, nationality, or perceived support for one of the parties to the conflict, notably in Bor and Bentiu, the capital cities of Jonglei and of Unity States respectively.⁷ Humanitarian workers, both foreign and national, have been targeted and killed, with no reported prosecutions.⁸

Human rights situation

5. Systematic and widespread human rights violations are extensively reported, as is a lack of accountability for those responsible for the violations.⁹ Sexual and gender-based violence (SGBV) is reportedly rampant and used as a tool of war, and there are also reports of SGBV incidents inside the PoC sites.¹⁰ Children are reported to be forcibly recruited on both sides of the conflict, while also suffering from other grave child rights violations.¹¹ Freedom of information has been restricted as journalists have been subjected to threats and violence by armed elements and some national media outlets have been ordered by the government to cease publishing.¹²

Humanitarian situation

6. The conflict has had a catastrophic impact on the civilian population, as large-scale displacement continues within and from South Sudan. More than 1.5 million South Sudanese are estimated to have been displaced internally, while more than 500,000 individuals have crossed the borders to seek refuge in Ethiopia, Kenya, Sudan, and Uganda.¹³ All governments in the region recognize civilians who fled South Sudan as refugees on a prima facie basis, and have sought to respond in a generous manner to the needs of the refugee population including by cooperating closely with UNHCR and other humanitarian actors.¹⁴
7. In South Sudan, more than 2.5 million people are facing crisis or emergency levels of food insecurity since January 2015, with the number likely to increase further in the lean season between April and July 2015.¹⁵ The malnutrition situation is classified as critical or very critical in over half of the country.¹⁶ In a country with sparse health and educational infrastructure, the civil conflict has now also caused a major public health crisis, disrupting essential primary and secondary health care services.¹⁷ At the same time, emergency education interventions are reportedly needed for at least 1.7 million children and adolescents as the conflict continues, including as a result of attacks against and the military use of schools.¹⁸ An estimated 2.3 million people have been found to be in need of shelter materials and basic household items.¹⁹ Humanitarian access has been constrained by security incidents against humanitarian staff, bureaucratic impediments and seasonal floods.²⁰

International protection needs and non-return advisory

8. In conclusion, the situation in South Sudan has continued to deteriorate since the outbreak of the current civil conflict in December 2013, with the security, rule of law and human rights situation in South Sudan remaining deeply compromised. In such a context, persons fleeing South Sudan are likely to meet the criteria for refugee status under the 1951 Refugee Convention,²¹ or would otherwise meet the criteria contained in the refugee definition in Article 1(2) of the 1969 OAU Convention.²² Depending on the individual profile and circumstances of the case, exclusion considerations may need to be looked into.²³ Furthermore, to preserve the civilian character of asylum, States need to assess the situation of arrivals carefully so as to identify armed elements and separate them from the civilian refugee population.²⁴
9. The security, rule of law and human rights situation pertaining today in South Sudan also stands in the way of safe and dignified return for any person originating from South Sudan, whether or not the individual is found to be in need of international protection. Accordingly, UNHCR hereby reaffirms the February 2014 position, recommending States to suspend forcible returns of nationals or habitual residents of South Sudan to the country. The bar on forcible return serves as a minimum standard and needs to remain in place until such time as the security, rule of law and human rights situation in South Sudan has improved sufficiently to permit a safe and dignified return of those determined not to be in need of international protection.
